I've been having a lot of problems trying to figure out what the output of this circuit is. I understand that the combination of nand and xnor is certainly a latch. The way the circuit works is that it is an exclusive-or circuit between some values and a constant. Then, the output of the circuit is a new constant. I believe that the reason I haven't been able to understand this, is that all I understand is how a circuit works based on on-off relationships

Remixing our own music, we feel equipped to help others create their own "Remix Party". We've put together a short 20 minute tutorial that describes our process of creating our own music. All you need is a pair of headphones and a music library on your computer. Simply use the room on your YouTube Channel to record our video. The controls are described on the bottom left screen of your keyboard. Good luck! Posted by Sharwf on 20 August 2016 I was trying to arrange a song myself. It took me quite a while to find the right piece. But this tutorial was very helpful and easy to follow. It gave me a good start. Thousands of members of the US military in Missouri are about to see a rare sight: a World War II-era aircraft on show. The 100th Armored Air Corps B-17 bomber, a heavy bomber developed from the B-17 Flying Fortress, has been preserved at the Army Aviation Museum at Fort Worth in Texas since 2005. But for the first time, it will be in front of their eyes in Rolla, Missouri, for a four-day event called "Reminiscence of the B-17". Unlike other B-17s - or "Fortresses", as they are more commonly known - the show's team of volunteers, most of whom are from Kansas, have spent years studying the old bomber, taking measurements and even restoring some of the original features. The aircraft's designation of 100th was a tribute to the 100th American air corps
