A Library panel opens, showing all your images and the various choices you've set for the view. * * * # Digitizing photographs This chapter describes the process of converting the image on a scanner. Scanning is a much cheaper way to create digitized images, but at the expense of quality. The images that you get back are usually only 256 pixels in height, and can have a resolution of just 3 to 8 pixels per inch. If you'd rather not deal with these limitations, save the original image, create a new image, then start the process of scanning. * * * ## Creating a New Image After you create a new file, Photoshop offers a conversion to Adobe RGB (1998, 2003, 2007) or sRGB (1998, 2003, 2007) if you've changed the quality settings to that format. The next section, "Setting the Resolution," explains how to change the resolution to the custom size you need.

Daphne Blunt Daphne Blunt, (1868–1943) was a noted British horticulturist, gardener and writer whose books were popular in the first half of the twentieth century. Born in London, she had an adventurous childhood, living in many cities and states on her father's job as a freight forwarding agent. Horticultural career Blunt made her first garden at her childhood home in Bedford. A year later she went to Lancing College and after two years, left to focus on her horticultural career. On summer visits, her father took her to orchids in the Lake District and Yorkshire. She learned how to propagate new varieties by seed and cuttings and she also learned to care for them. Blunt was a regular at the Royal Horticultural Society (RHS) meetings until her death. She was a member of the society from 1902 to 1944. She was a farmer when she decided to specialize in breeding early and mid season flowering bulbs, taking them as early as 1887 to the RHS show at Chatsworth House in Derbyshire. Her bulbs were given the variety designation "Blunt's Hybrid" after her, but have since been renamed. Her bulbs were popular due to their attractive flowers, easy care and hardiness. Her experimental breeding work began with the hybridization of Snowball and Strabo as Snowball had late flowering varieties and Strabo had very early flowering varieties. In 1890, Blunt took her bulbs to George S. Arthur and they were registered in his name in 1893 as a variety named GSA 23. In 1896, Blunt published a book on annuals called Songs of the Spring. It was updated in 1910 and revised in 1913. Her publications focused on horticulture, including garden displays and recipes, but her writing also included more serious, non-gardening issues. Later life and death Blunt's health deteriorated in her later years and in 1917 she had a lung operation that affected her memory and her ability to write. She died the following year.
